A variety of factors at play

Ultimately, the ability to use a credit card to place bets could depend on several factors, including the gambling venue, the state you're in, the bank that issues your credit card, and the payment network that your credit card operates on (Visa, Mastercard, AmEx or Discover).

Here's why.

Specifically for American Express cards, gambling-related purchases are disqualified for Pay Over Time, a feature that makes your American Express card function more like a traditional credit card, allowing you to finance qualifying purchases with interest.

Again, it depends on the issuer of the card whether online gambling is considered a cash advance.

Brick-and-mortar casinos don't typically accept credit cards yet - though they are working on it.
