Handicap betting, also known as line betting, is a form of spread betting that is common in sports where goals or points determine the winner, most notably football, rugby, basketball and American football while handicap means something different in horse racing.

Essentially the bookmakers will place a handicap on one of the teams that they must overcome to win.

While this may appear relatively simple there are a number of variations on this straightforward handicap bet known as Asian lines which we go into further detail below.

If you bet on the underdog at +1.

The situation becomes a little more complicated when looking at quarter and three-quarter goal handicaps.

For example, if you are betting on a -2 draw and the favourites end up winning 2 -0 then your bet will win.

5 and there are more than eight corners then your bet wins.

You can bet on Asian handicaps in play where the bets are settled on the goals scored after your bet as well as Asian corners in play.
