If you have some extra time on your hands or you're simply looking to make a few more bucks, then you may want to consider paid online surveys. With paid surveys, you can earn money without leaving the comfort of your own home. How much money are you looking to make? Some people can make a hefty sum by taking surveys, but that isn't the norm. Don't expect to get rich quickly or replace your full-time income by taking paid surveys. For example, Survey Junkie says you can make up to $40 per month if you take three surveys every day. Many reviewers of paid survey site Swagbucks, for example, said it's a great way to help with costly holiday shopping and pay for groceries, though some mentioned that it's not always easy to qualify for surveys or to meet daily goals. However, it appears most agree it's worth the hype. Swagbucks received 4.3 stars out of 5 from nearly 30,000 reviewers on Trustpilot, a consumer business operating a review website. Again, if you're looking to make significant money to supplement your income, then you may want to consider a higher-paying side hustle that can sustain you long-term. You may also want to seek other options if you want to lower your screen time, want a consistent paycheck, or don't want to put in the time. There's also always a privacy risk when it comes to sharing information online, so make sure you carefully read each site's terms of service and privacy policy before signing up.

How much do online surveys really pay?

Swagbucks: "Most Swagbucks members should be able to earn $1 to $5 a day (o) Tj T* typical day, earnings could average out to $1 to $5 a day," Swagbucks states on its website. There are different levels you can reach based on your total earnings. Hundreds of participants have reached the rare diamond-level status, which means they've earned over $20,000, according to Swagbucks.
