Sports betting systems are sets of events that when combined for a particular game for a particular sport represent a profitable betting scenario.

Any single event that estimates a selection to have a higher likelihood of winning is called an angle as they are meant to be used in conjunction with other angles and trends to produce systems.Overview [edit]

One group that was known for their accurate predictions was called The Computer Group.

The network of bettors would then bet on games in which they had a statistical advantage (as determined by the software).

The results determined that the most important aspect to winning the game was passing efficiency.

For instance, in football, 3 or 7 points are typically scored at a time, so bets involving a final score frequently include combinations of these two numbers.

These are deviations from the common rule and give you a competitive advantage.

But, they only come into play in a fractional percentage of game outcomes.
