Is Gambling a Credit Score Factor? Credit scores are based on the information included on your credit report.

Amounts owed and credit utilization

Casino line of credit: Casinos may directly grant lines of credit to gamblers.

According to the Consumer Finance Protection Bureau, a typical payday loan comes with fees that are equivalent to nearly 400% annual percentage rate (APR).

The average credit card APR is about 16%, according to the latest Federal Reserve data from November 2021.

Missed payments: If funds get tied up in gambling payments or debts, you may find yourself missing payments for other things.

Increased credit utilization: Credit utilization shows how much of your available revolving credit you are currently using.

It's an important factor in your credit score, and a high credit utilization can easily drag down your scores.
